G Product innovations by Google to help the local businesses connect with their customers. The key details from the announcement are Retail and restaurant advertisers will soon be able to use Smart Bidding for store sales to optimize for in-store transactions, not just visits. For example, advertisers can upload their first-party, privacy-safe transaction data to inform ongoing optimization—all with the goal of driving additional sales at the store level. Reach out to your Google team to learn more.

"Pickup later" for local inventory ads gives you the option to promote products that may not be available in store now, but can be available for pickup within a few days. Reach out to your Google team to learn more.

f Facebook to start limiting the number of ads a page can run at once. The announcement read

When an advertiser runs too many ads at once, each ad delivers less often. This means that fewer ads exit the learning phase, and more budget is spent before the delivery system can optimize performance.

We discovered that four in ten running ads fail to exit the learning phase, and many of these ads come from advertisers running too many ads at the same time.

For this reason, we're implementing a limit on the number of ads each Page can run at once 72% of the survey participants described "How-to" guides as an absolute leader at the top of the marketing funnel.

MOFU content success is measured by conversion rate (75%) and the number of leads (54%).

G How Google delivers reliable information in Search? The announcement read

A simple way to think about it is that there are three key elements to our approach to information quality:

First, we fundamentally design our ranking systems to identify information that people are likely to find useful and reliable.

To complement those efforts, we also have developed a number of Search features that not only help you make sense of all the information you're seeing online, but that also provide direct access to information from authorities—like health organizations or government entities.

Finally, we have policies for what can appear in Search features to make sure that we're showing high quality and helpful content.

G Google lists down the ways they've improved Shopping results on Google Search. The announcement read Whatever you're looking for, whether it's a new laptop for working from home, a baby jacket for fall or a grill for backyard barbeques, Google makes it easy for you to see what's available locally. Simply tap the Shopping tab, and select the Nearby filter at the top of the page or add "near me" to your search to view product options available from stores located near you.

It's now easier to see what's in stores near you before committing to going in person, with a map view and list of stores in the area. You can check each business's opening and closing hours, as well as how far each store is from you. You'll also get a preview of the items they sell that match what you searched for, with a carousel you can scroll through to see pictures and prices of the available products.

B Bing applies natural language generation models to improve its autosuggest and People Also Ask (PAA) features. Read more here

G How often does Google rewrite meta descriptions? (New Data Study). The key findings from the study include:

25.02% of top-ranking pages don't have a meta description.

Google rewrites meta descriptions 62.78% of the time.

Google is slightly less likely to rewrite meta descriptions that truncate.
